

St. Irenatus was the favorite material for ornaments of parasols this year. Parasols of lace and chiffon, so much used last year, are equally fashionable now. Carved and knotted woods are among the newer handles, and are more decorative than those made of pearl. Silver is much used, highly polished, oxidized or combined with other materials.

Among the very expensive handles are those with Dresden China figures, enameled with French gilt. Carved outlines of pearl, tortoise shell or coral are seen on parasols of turtle and lace.

To have the silk waist match the lining of the jacket of the suit is a novelty of present smart dressing.

HOW TO GO TO SLEEP.

Say the Positive—We Must Think, but We Needn't Think Connectedly.

For occasional victims of sleeplessness in ordinary physical health here is a simple remedy that will be found efficacious in probably five cases out of six. Do not attempt to stop the action of the mind by one supreme effort of the will; try not to go to sleep or even think about sleep. But stop making sentences. A writer in Popular Science News gives reasons for this advice as follows: As every one knows, we think and remember in sentences. We must think, so, instead of trying not to think, try the possible and break up your thoughts, so to speak, into words.

Take for example the first word that comes into your mind. We will suppose it to be the word house. Presently another word follows, but if this word bears any grammatical or associative relation to the word house, let it pass out of your mind without notice and take one of a different class—such as a word, for example, as enthusiasm.

Now you have house, enthusiasm, and you may add—not exerting the will, remember, but waiting passively for the words to present themselves—until your series swelling out like this: House, enthusiasm, Great Britain, walk, 26, tangible beyond, superior, Washington, etc. Of course you are to avoid a succession of names and numbers and all classifications of words.

As the disconnected ideas flow on in your mind you will gradually find yourself taking a mild interest in the disjointed procession. You lose your agitating self consciousness and fall into a passive state. In other words, you have reduced the process of thinking to a minimum. You wait with a slender thread of interest for the coming words, knowing that it will make no difference what they are. Perhaps you may feel like one sitting on the bank of a river listlessly watching the objects that float on its surface. Now it will be a leaf, next a block of wood. But your leaves and your blocks of wood all have words written on them, and one after another they appeal to your notice and then float away down the stream.

By degrees the intervals between the passing words lengthen, syllables become mixed, there is dreamy confusion, with perhaps an incoherent fancy, and then sleep.

A FEAST TO THE PUMPKIN.

*How dear to my heart
Is the old yellow pumpkin!
When orchards are barren,
Or stumps for pies,
When peaches and apples
Have both been a failure,
And berries of no kind.
Have greeted our eyes—
How fondly we turn
To the fruit of the earthfield.
Only tools these despise—
The old yellow pumpkin,
The mud covered pumpkin,
The big bellied pumpkin,
That make such good pies.*

PURIFINE

In the disinfectant that the world is talking about. In the United States its merits are becoming known. The people are using it. Purifine possesses many points in its favor over other preparations. It is odorless, and in employing it as a disinfecting agent, does not create another odor as offensive as that which it subdues. Non-poisonous too. That's an advantage—children will meddle; servants misunderstand; then there's trouble. Some one is poisoned.

Those who use it speak its praise in convincing language. Here's one from the Department of Medicine in the University of Michigan.

"We use Purifine and find it very good for deodorizing sinks and boxes, etc., and for
